Technical Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to a clamp for installing a valve in a conduit. More particularly, the present invention relates to a pneumatic operated clamp that selectively and securely attaches to a valve, such as a diaphragm valve, to provide an airtight seal that prevents leakage of air pressure from the conduit. 2. Description of Related Art A typical oil refining system utilizes a high pressure pump to draw oil from a reservoir, such as a fuel tank or a lake. The oil passes through a fuel line that conveys the oil to a burner or engine via a furnace, for example. The high pressure pump is located downstream of the fuel line, and directs the oil to the burner. In most oil refineries, an orifice-type valve is located in the fuel line. The valve is located upstream of the high pressure pump, and opens to allow fuel to flow to the burner. The valve is constructed from a flexible diaphragm, and is attached to the conduit by an internal valve seat, and an external body, all of which are sealed together by t678ea9f9e
